3 Tips for Closing an Interview & Getting the Job

Industrial Maintenance Technician students getting ready for their next big interview

By Marlene Phillips
Director of Advising and Outreach

Every job interview has to end (thankfully!), and you can expect to be asked if you have any questions about the job or organization as the interview is wrapping up.

Be ready for this part of the interview by remembering these three tips to leave a fantastic final impression.

1. Know what's truly important to you in a job, and then tailor your questions to that.

Are you seeking personal growth, the best culture, autonomy, promotion, support, respect, success...? Those are just a few examples.

You'll have to do some thinking to come up with your own, but doing so will lead you to the most impactful questions.

Here are a few examples of questions that may help you learn more about what's important to you in this potential new workplace.

- What motivates you to come to work?
- What are you most proud of here at Acme Machines?
- Could you give me an example of an employee you supervised that has been promoted? How did you support that employee's development and eventual promotion?

- How are hard work and outstanding results recognized at Acme Machines?
- What is the usual career trajectory for someone in the Widget Maker role?
- What about my application/resume/cover letter caught your eye and interested you in me as a candidate for this position?

After Homeless Homer Trilogy Part II

By Laura Haworth
Library Cataloguer

While a journalist for the Austin-Statesman, I interviewed the former Delton officer who had fatally shot Joseph and his dog and learned new details about the events leading up to it.

Mr. Moore had long ago left the city of Delton and was willing to talk to me as long as my article wasn't solely on the shooting incident itself or about him specifically.

I told him that this particular piece spoke broadly on the misconceptions and difficulties of the homeless and mentally disturbed in both small towns and large cities, past and present.

To my surprise, he admitted that he had preconceived notions about Joseph, both before and after that day, and that it was a factor in his split-second decision to 'pull the trigger' on Joseph, just as the man was raising his left hand from the pocket of his raincoat.

"It wasn't just that I had seen him wandering the streets of Delton for nearly a year and thought he was homeless, but because he fit the description of the man that we, the Delton and Sherwood police forces, were looking for as a person of interest.

"This was after that young girl, that first-grader from Sherwood, was reported missing, and then was found later, shot in the back, in the middle of woods, just a mile from her school.

"She was walking home from school when she was approached by this man. Two of the girl's classmates saw him talking to her and gave us a pretty good description of him.

"We'd been looking for him for months. A Texas Ranger was even brought in on the case. Anyway, I suddenly realized that Homeless Hom...I mean Joseph, seemed to fit the description."

Mr. Moore also emphasized how closely he watched Joseph's hand as he took it out of the pocket of the raincoat, and yet it was only after the bullet from his gun had seared through Joseph's heart that he saw that he was only holding a photograph in his hand, and not a gun.

And while processing that reality, Chance, Joseph's dog, came crashing through the basement window of the house...a muzzle on his snout and a chain dragging behind him, in obvious attack mode.

Even with the muzzle, Moore said he felt threatened by the animal and shot him several times.

He then looked at me and commented that he'd have never guessed that I was that young girl who was there that day, had I not told him so.

I assured him that I was indeed that little girl that was believed to have been abducted by Joseph, and who had witnessed the shooting of the dog from behind the chain length fence.

He insisted that he hadn't become aware of my presence until he started firing his gun, and heard me screaming at him.

It was a struggle for me not to react to his response, to not show any indication that it bothered me very much that he had heard my pleas for him to stop shooting, and yet, he continued to do so.

"I'm sorry that you had to see all that," he said.

"I sure wouldn't have wanted any child of mine to witness it."

I asked him if he remembered that I had also screamed at him right after he had shot Joseph... asking twice, "Why did you kill him?" He shook his head.

"I don't remember that." I told him that I did and that he had looked straight at me in stunned silence, never saying one word to me. He shrugged his shoulders.

"I was a young cop, less than a year on the force, and we thought we were dealing with a murder suspect. I quit the police force not long after that, you know.

"I decided I wasn't cut out to be an officer of the law, and this was after the FBI cleared me in their months-long investigation."

"Do you remember how you felt when the actual killer of that Sherwood girl was caught?" I asked because I knew all about that arrest.

In fact, I had followed the news on anything that had to do with her death. As my mother once put it, I'd become obsessed with reading newspapers.

The man they arrested and charged had only a vague similarity to Joseph. He was a very young man, compared to Joseph, and was clean-shaven at the time of his arrest.

Mr. Moore hesitated before answering my question.

Well you know I was just glad that the right person was finally caught and apprehended but... to lose yet another local girl to that maniac, that was hard on all of us."

What he didn't know, and what I didn't tell him, was that I knew that local girl who had lost her life to the "maniac" and was another trauma I experienced as a child.

He asked me whether I suffered flashbacks from that day, and I told him yes, then surprised myself by admitting to him how I blamed myself as well for what happened to them.

"I could have left that house, you know? Joseph would have let me leave, but I didn't. I stayed, and I even...I even took a necklace that belonged to him." He looked puzzled by my statement, so I told him about it, and all that happened afterward.

The newscaster on the ten o'clock news reported an inaccurate version of the events of that evening, starting with a statement of my alleged kidnapping and then with Joseph's death.

I wasn't supposed to be awake, much less watching the news. My parents had insisted I go to bed early, to try and forget the events of the day and get some sleep.

Instead, I snuck out of bed and stood in the doorway to the den, watching my parents in their armchairs, anxiously taking in the local newscaster's report.

"A ten-year-old girl from Delton was rescued by police officers this afternoon after they received a call about a possible child abduction," the newscaster began.

"Police officers were alerted to a wooded area in South Delton after receiving an anonymous report of the sighting of a bearded man carrying a motionless child through the woods."

That Night at the Wiener Dog Race

By Dave Hamrick
Training Coordinator
Center for Workplace Learning

The wiener brothers, Oscar and Jak

Well, the night did not go quite as I had hoped. I had high aspirations for Jak to kick much wiener dog butt at the Texas Revolution game tonight. That did not happen...

The wiener brothers really only know one world (our house and the backyard), one other dog (the pit that lives directly behind us), and our son Nicholas.

That is the entirety of their world. Time to expand their horizons, right? Here's how we chose to do that:

We loaded the wiener brothers into the Acadia for the drive to Allen.

Oscar, although he wants to go with me every time I leave the house, hates riding in the vehicle! He whines and talks and jabbars and shakes... ALL.THE.TIME!

Jak, on the other hand, likes to look out the windows at the new world.

Anyway, we drove to the Allen Event Center, where they will be holding a wiener dog race at half-time.

We HAVE to load them into a carrier (which they have never spent more than 10 minutes in) to go into the building, full of people, and look for a group that all have dogs... all while in a carrier they hate... after a 35-minute drive in a car they don't like. See where I'm going here?

The wiener brothers make their arrival known to pretty much everyone in the building. I'm surprised the announcer didn't ask what the heck was going on in the lobby.

As we approach the other dogs, the boys announce LOUDER that they are HERE! Now the other dogs, whom we didn't hear as we walked up, are now responding in a loud chorus, to which the wiener brothers escalate their tempo and volume.

Yes, the rest of the wiener people looked down on us as we got closer.

(Tammy had told me the boys were just going to embarrass us, and that we would probably be asked to leave the building shortly after we walked in, but I would not be deterred).

I apologized in advance and confided with one other racer that we just hoped neither of the boys would attack another wiener during the race.

We decided to blame their lack of manners on being "country wieners."

We ended up taking the boys outside and walking around far from any other wieners or people.

When the other folks started gathering up their wieners, we knew it was "time."

We carried the boys to the end zone tunnel and waited for the final seconds to count down.

Sure enough, the Revolution scored just before the half. THEN it happened.

When the Revolution score a touchdown, they fire off some sort of cannon under the stands. Guess how far we were from the "cannon"? 20 feet, max!

And since we were basically under the stands as well, it was freakin' LOUD!!

All wieners and wiener people were temporarily dazed and showed signs of shock. BUT, the race must go on!

HALF TIME!

The participants were led onto the field. (Who knew you could fit a football field in a hockey rink?

(Kinda reminded me of playing basketball in my basement when I was a kid, but I digress) Mid-field is the 25-yard line. I was on one 15-yard line, and Tammy was on the other.

20-yard race. Cool, we got this!

Now, not that all the lights, the cheerleaders, the fans throwing little footballs at the mid-field logo was enough distraction...

Well, let's say this was NOT a sanctioned wiener race.

In between the start and finish lines, they had laid out bowls of food, and lots of toys! How were these poor "country wieners" ever supposed to perform the way I had envisioned?

I am proud to say that none of the food or toys distracted them!

"You got this! Look, look! There's momma! See momma? There she is! GO GET MOMMA!!

"On your mark, get set, GO!!"

GO!!!!

Really GO!!!

I let both of the boys loose. They turned around and just looked at me. GO!!!

I look at Tammy, she is waving and squeaking a brand spanking new toy, trying to get their attention.

Some little female wiener (wearing a dang dress) runs straight to Tammy and WANTS. THAT.TOY!!

Tammy is now laughing hysterically and holding the toy over the little wiener girl's head...

on MY side of the finish line!!!

The dog has made a beeline for Tammy, but because of where Tammy is holding the toy, the little girl has NOT crossed the finish line!

This little girl's human is four or five people to the right of Tammy yelling, "IT'S NOT YOUR TOY. HERE GIRL!!"

Meanwhile, the boys are running around the starting line, making friends with the other dogs that couldn't care less about running across the field.

They do look at me from time to time as if to say, "Where's mom? she's missing all the fun!"

Finally, I decide to pick up Tammy's purse and walk down to the finish line.

About three-quarters of the way there, the boys figure it out. Well, they followed me.

I get down there and Tammy is still holding the toy over the little girl wiener, who I still don't think has crossed the finish line.

I'm not sure who won. I'm not sure how many wieners actually crossed the finish line. The on-field announcer did try to interview both of the boys, but neither had a comment.

We walked back to where we had staged the carrier and the wagon.

We put the boys in the wagon so all their adoring fans could get a closer view, or a picture... some even petted their little heads.

The boys could tell the hard part was over and were now just enjoying the attention.

We drove home and made a stop at Sonic where the boys split a burger patty. No whining... just two tired wieners ready for bed.

A good night, even though we didn't win.

Last Six Ninety One Lunch Service on Wed., May 4 for Semester

By Marlea Trevino
The Viking Sponsor

The last lunch service of the semester for Grayson College's student restaurant Six Ninety One will be next Wednesday, May 4.

Patrons can email Executive Chef Joanna Bryant at BryantJ@grayson.edu for reservations. Include in your message the number of your party and your desired reservation time (11:15 a.m.-12:30 p.m.).

Enrollment in the Culinary Arts program has decreased due to restrictions imposed over the last couple of years to deal with the pandemic.

According to Chef Bryant, "Due to lower student numbers, we are sad to announce that we will not be open for regular lunch service this fall.

We will have some charcuterie buffets and our October Beer Pairing Dinner! We will re-open in the spring of 2023."

However, the talented CA students the program produces will still be busy showcasing their skills as they usually do around the nation.

What's Happening at GC

I watched as my father reached over and took my mother's hand and squeezed it. I closed my eyes as the newscaster continued.

"After a door-to-door search of the neighborhood bordering the woods, the police located the man and the ten-year-old girl inside a vacant rent house."

When it came to the shooting, the newscaster referred to it as an 'altercation' that resulted in the suspect being fatally shot and there was no mention of the dog at all.

The actual reporting took less than a minute for him to report, while behind him, they showed pictures of the rent house, the backyard, and the chain length fence, all draped in yellow crime scene tape.

I rushed back to my bedroom, still reeling from the report and the pictures. They had shown the very spot where I had stood and watched the unfolding horror.

Again I felt that pang of guilt. Had I not followed Joseph to that room full of family pictures, and just left the house, none of it would have happened.

I couldn't think of that pivotal moment without remembering my taking of the necklace and relived all of it as I lay on my bed, tears running down my face once again.

I had fallen to my knees after witnessing

Chance getting shot and killed, his body riddled with gunshot wounds, inches away from his master's blood-soaked body.

It was just too much for me to bear and I had dropped to my knees and was in tears. My screams had been futile.

He never stopped shooting, and never acknowledged my pleas for him to stop. They were both dead, and there was nothing I could do about it.

At that moment, I felt for that necklace in my pocket, took it out, and looked at it through my tears. The beautiful, shiny, silver medallion twirled at the end of the chain.

The engraving of the man carrying a child over his shoulder seemed to call out to me, to remind me that Joseph had carried me to the house to doctor my wound, the way he would have done had I been his daughter.

I let the necklace drop to the ground, then covered my face with my hands. Dale and Jason came up behind me, whispering words of comfort.

They helped me get back on my feet, and I was led back to Dale's car, where Jason and I slid into the backseat, but before Dale could drive off.

Margaret arrived in front of the house, driving a dark blue Rambler. She had hardly shut off the motor before stepping out and rushing toward the rent house.

Two of the officers confronted her before she had even passed the rent sign in the yard and she furiously fought off the hold they had on her arms.

I plainly saw the pain on her face, felt her agony, her grief...and was overwhelmed by it.

My thoughts returned to Margaret after watching the news station's report. She deserved to know the truth and to have that necklace I left on the ground.

It would give her comfort, being in her possession. I regretted not having picked it back up so that I could give it to her someday.

My parents decided I should stay home, and not go to school, so I could "recover from my horrible ordeal."

Dale would stay home too, and keep me company, while they went on to work, but promised me they would come home early, and have another talk with me about what had happened, for they hadn't believed any of what I had already told them, and they wanted a doctor to check out my head wound.

But I was grateful to them for letting me stay home and under the care of Dale.

It made it easier to sneak out of the house so that I could find the necklace, which led me to Margaret, whom I came to know and love, our friendship, lasting her lifetime.

3 Tips for Closing an Interview & Getting the Job

2. Engage the interviewer(s) as the expert(s) on the job and the organization.

This means really listening to their response(s) and truly learning from their experience if the job is right for you.

3. Only ask questions at the close of the interview if you are actually interested in the job or working with the team of people that interviewed.

Remember folks are on their best behavior in an interview. If they aren't nice in the interview, they won't be nice in the job.

Be sure to clearly state that you want the job if you do.

"I'm pleased with what I've learned today. I want this position. Where do we go from here?" is a simple and effective way to convey your interest and leave a great impression.

Survey Says...

By Emily Sileven

One of the most bizarre topics that has come from the media is the story of Elon Musk and his decision to purchase Twitter.

While some see it as a means to keep our freedom of speech, others see it as Musk being reckless and buying Twitter for his personal gain.

Curious, The Viking went to see how our fellow Vikings reacted to this news.

Out of all the people who were willing to participate, nearly 85% believed they thought Elon Musk was doing the right thing in buying Twitter.

To my surprise, while some were not aware of the newest headline, nobody disagreed with Musk's decision.

One student, Landon Jeffries, believes that Musk wants to protect the rights we have as U.S. citizens.

"He wants to open up free speech. That is why there is so much uproar to shut it down. He is aware that the censorship of Conservatives is an issue and he wants to stand up for that," Jeffries said.

As the media closely watches Musk's next move, we can only imagine what will happen next.

Will Twitter be a better place for both Liberals and Conservatives? Will the majority of people still use Twitter in the days to come? How much will Musk affect Twitter's stock? Only time will tell.

EDITOR'S NOTES

By Emily Sileven
Viking Editor

Hello GC Vikings!

Man, the time has flown by so quickly! It seems like I started the Spring semester just yesterday.

With finals around the corner, I know we are all studying and staying up late like madmen.

Also, congratulations to those who are graduating in the spring! I know you have worked your butt off every single day.

And to those who have just finished their first semester here at GC, welcome!

Just some words of wisdom: Your college experience here is what you make it.

Please, please, please make time to visit clubs that interest you and create a friend group. Otherwise, you will seriously regret it.

Personally, I regret not joining the BSM and other clubs sooner.

I have enjoyed editing The Viking for as long as I did.

I enjoyed hearing from people and learning about events happening all over the college.

I never imagined I would create so many friendships from the Career Center to the BSM.

It has truly been an honor to edit the paper for Grayson College.

To the next editor, Katherine Petri, I hope you have just as much fun editing The Viking as I did.

Knowing you, you will create some of the best papers the college has ever seen!

I wish you the best of luck on this exciting journey, even though you most likely don't need any.

Thank you to everyone at Grayson College for making my college experience a memorable one.

FREE Lunch every Wednesday?

It's true!

From waffles to burgers, the BSM provides students with a delicious lunch, dessert, and awesome prizes too.

Head over to the BSM building (next to the police station) and grab yourself a plate (or three) of yummy food!
